Securosys makes headway: Growth financing with ICO, Deutsche Börse Venture Network and team reinforcement with Geraldine Critchley

With the advent of blockchain technology and crypto currencies and facilities, Securosys has updated its products to meet the strong demand from large companies in these new markets. Since then, Securosys has been a pioneer in helping its customers and partners secure blockchains and crypto assets. To finance its global growth, Securosys decided to increase its capital through an Initial Token Offering (ITO), which has now also been published in the Deutsche Börse Venture Network.

In 2018 Securosys decided to increase its capital through an Initial Token Offering (ITO). These security tokens carry dividend rights and enable investors to either convert tokens into company shares or trade Securosys tokens via stock exchange trading or on a regulated secondary market for cryptocurrencies and tokens. A concept that is also interesting for traditional investors.

The Deutsche Börse Venture Network is also pleased to include Securosys as the first investment opportunity in the new area of security tokens.

To continue its global expansion, Securosys brings on board Geraldine Critchley, an experienced hardware and software marketer, to achieve market leadership in the B2B hardware security and services industry. Geraldine Critchley will report directly to CEO Robert Rogenmoser as Director Marketing to position the Securosys brand in international markets. Geraldine Critchley brings a wealth of experience from international projects, including at Mettler Toledo AG and Crealogix Digital Banking. As a B2B marketing strategist and manager with an international focus, she brings together experience in IT hardware security and new digital business models for financial service providers. She has worked with numerous international bank clients on digital transformation projects.
